Though he hoped to plot a path out of chaos, Macron's errors prolong a political crisis in France

Despite having made several appearances during the Olympic Games, Emmanuel Macron stepped back from the public eye for a long period of his residence in France during the Games. Since then, having called for a political truce while Paris hosted a spectacular sporting competition, the French president hoped to chart a path out of the crisis created by his decision to call an early election in mid-summer.

Nothing of the sort happened. The Olympic athletes have long since departed, and the traditional rentrée of September is approaching. But no new government has taken shape - the longest hiatus since immediately after the second world war - and the bitterness remains. This week, Mr. Macron used his presidential power to dismiss any candidate for prime minister proposed by the New Popular Front (NFP), the left-wing alliance that narrowly won the July election.

This was the last error in a tragicomic series of blunders. No parliamentary majority in the Assembly, and a minority government from the NFP would have been a difficult but more democratically sound solution. Instead, it seems that the president hopes to build a complacent coalition leaning towards the right; one that, above all, will leave his unpopular reforms intact. This will not be an easy task. The presidency of Macron is now gravely compromised. Humiliated by Marine Le Pen in the June European elections, he hoped to restore his authority by surprising the legislative elections with a "front republican" to check the far right. This strategy of rehabilitation was defeated by the unexpected success of the left. For ambitious conservative politicians, the prospect of linking their fortunes to a lame duck still proved too tempting.

But it is not all about the president and his wishes, or at least it should not be. With a combination of subtlety, audacity and technical brilliance, Mr. Macron divided and governed French politics since 2017. But, indulging his characteristic desire to remain completely in control of events, even after losing, he is fighting against the best interests of the country he leads.

The loss of confidence in politics contributed to the rise of the far right across Europe, just as in France. In the face of this scenario, refusing to give the victors a chance to forge a consensus is imprudent and myopic. Mr. Macron justified his posture by equating the far right with the party of Jean-Luc Mélenchon (LFI) and the Rassemblement National of Ms Le Pen. But, after repeatedly depending on a broad front republican, including the LFI, to keep Ms Le Pen out of power, this is clearly dishonest.

In the meantime, France is in limbo. Ms. Le Pen - whose eyes have always been on the 2027 presidential election - can afford to wait for the conventional politics to unfold. The prospect of government remains distant. The interim prime minister of Macron, Gabriel Attal, is currently working on a provisional budget for autumn, which he admits could be overturned by his successor. His hubris, once again, led the president into this situation. A new humility is needed to get France out of this.
